Betting Line and David Miller winning the deciding heat of the 71st Little Brown Jug with a 1:49 world record.

Hometown driving legend David Miller won his fourth Little Brown Jug, trainer Casie Coleman her third and Betting Line extended his unbeaten streak to 13 races with a straight heats victory Thursday (Sept. 22) in Delaware, OH that was capped by a 1:49 half-mile world record.

"He's not probably the best horse (I've trained), he's definitely the best horse I've ever trained, no question. And I've had a lot of nice horses, and love them all," said Coleman who won the 2012 Jug with Michaels Power and the 2013 edition with Vegas Vacation. "He never gets tired this horse. He doesn't blow after a race... There's been many times that I haven't been an overly happy camper with where he was the race's 71st edition is officially under protest with the Ohio State Racing Commission after other Jug trainers alleged there may have been a plan to treat the son of Bettor's Delight—Heather's Western on Jug Day in violation of the rules (see story pg 5).

While Coleman said the controversy did dampen her connections' celebrations, nothing could diminish her love of Betting Line or the Jug.

"This isn't the biggest purse race, but this means more to me than the North America Cup, which is a million-dollar race. It's just a great day to be here," she said.

With the victory, Betting Line, who was bred by Fair Winds Farm of Cream Ridge, NJ, earned $291,576 on the day and improved to 13-1-0 in 14 starts this year for earnings of $1,372,386. He's now 19-3-2 in 26 career starts with earnings of $1,784,061 for the West Wins Stable (Coleman and Ross and Margaret Warriner) of Cambridge, ON, Steve and Christine Calhoun of Chatham, ON and Mac Nichol of Burlington, ON.

"I wish I could go back on live (simulcast) and say, 'This one's for you, Ross,'" Coleman said. "There was a lot going through my head at the same time, but Ross has been one of the first owners ever with me and he owns half of every horse (I own). West Win Stables is me and Ross and his wife Margaret. Ross got very sick and had to have heart surgery a few months back and couldn't make it here and it's just killing him not to make it here. Anyone that knows Ross Warriner, knows that he's at every race there is. Margaret was here today. My bookkeeper April Campbell was kind enough to drive her down and share a hotel room with her to make sure she was here for the horse."

Clutching yellow flowers, Margaret Warriner looked particularly emotional in the winner's circle.

"Ross had a heart operation, but he's watching it. He's recovering at home," she said. "He's thrilled. I'm his representative."

Standing beneath the old grandstand on their way to the exits, Steve Calhoun and Nichol were holding the Jug trophy and marveling about how easy Betting Line made it look.

"That was about as stress-free as you could possibly have," Calhoun said of the six-horse final, which Betting Line won by eight lengths over second heat winner Western Fame. "At the three-eighths pole, I was just hoping no equipment falls off, because short of that we were going to win. You could see Dave had a ton of horse, so I was pretty sure we were going to win the race. It was really fun to watch him in action, just watch his power without having to worry that he was eight lengths back at the three-quarters and wondering if he was going to get there or not.

His elimination was a dream, too. If I could have dreamed it up at home that would have been it. Beautiful cover, Lyons Snyder took him around the turn very aggressively and then we were able to pop off. It just couldn't have worked out any better."

Jug victory under protest after trainers discover questionable text messages allegedly sent by winning trainer

Dave Landry

Betting Line's Jug victory is under protest due to a text message scandal.

by Dave Briggs

The Little Brown Jug is under formal protest with the Ohio State Racing Commission. A group of trainers said text messages allegedly sent by trainer Casie Coleman on the morning of the Jug caused concern that her horse, Jug winner Betting Line, may have been treated in violation of the rules.

Trainers Tony Alagna, Jimmy Takter and Ron Burke, who collectively condition the other five horses that were in Betting Line's heat, launched an official protest before the race and refused to come out for the post parade.

"We didn't feel like everything was on the up and up," Alagna said before the first heat. "We felt like a horse may have been treated. We don't know that for sure because we never saw anything, but we saw intent to do something based on text messages. We know that's not a lot, but we called it into question and we thought it was time for us in the industry to take a little bit of a stand.

"We're not accusing anyone of doing anything, but we just want answers. We're not taking part in the post parade. We're coming out by ourselves for a reason."

Coleman, a member of the Little Brown Jug Society, did not deny that she sent the text messages, which were discovered and reported to judges when a phone belonging to one of Coleman's employees was discovered after being lost at the Delaware County Fairgrounds on Wednesday night.

The phone was locked, but several messages were visible on the lock screen and photos of the lock screens were taken.

Harness Racing Update has seen two photos of those messages, one allegedly sent from Coleman's cell number read, "Any time between line 830-1030 range when it's clear softly (sic) get his treatments into him."

"My professional opinion... if they did or did not (do something), I cannot answer, of course, but I think they had a plan today and were going to give the horse something," Takter said.

Coleman said the "treatment" was simply yogurt.

Takter called BS on that story and then questioned the judges' handling of the investigation.

"Did they ever question what was in the yogurt? Maybe it's baking soda in the yogurt, how do I know? They should have taken the groom and her and thrown them in two separate rooms and if they had a similar story it would have been more accurate," Takter said.

Coleman, who said her tack trunks, horse trailer and car were searched by racing officials, said the other trainers "are just trying to get (Betting Line) scratched because they simply can't beat him."

"(Officials) can do anything they want – they did blood testing, they did urine samples. They took another blood sample for TCO2 testing. I told them, 'Anything you want to do, go to town' and I believe they are going to test him again now and I just let them have free access to the horse. The talked about sending testing to Hong Kong, I said 'I'll pay for it, go ahead, no problem' so they can do whatever they want. We did absolutely nothing wrong and if (the other trainers) want to act childish, well, this is the Little Brown Jug and I'm here to train my horse to beat them, not to try to get them scratched to beat me."

Takter, who won the second heat with Western Fame and was second to Betting Line in the final, said he Burke and Alagna heavily considered scratching their horses. "The only reason why we raced was we clearly felt bad for the Little Brown Jug with all the people out there. Otherwise, we would have all just walked out," Takter said.

"You know what, God bless (Coleman) if she wants to win that way. This was a very cloudy win, in my eyes anyway," Takter said.

"(A Jug official) said to us, 'You want us to scratch the horse based on this text message? Do you think it looked genuine?' I said, 'It's a very hard decision, yes. But what would they do, if Tony, Ron and I said we weren't going to let that horse out on the track. What would they do then?'"

Coleman said the other trainers did not speak to her. "Not one of them had enough nuts to come over and ask me, 'What is this?' Not one of them spoke to me," Coleman said. "I was in the Jug barn myself all day long. They could have come up to me, asked me 'What is this? What's the problem?' Ask me anything. I've cooperated with the judges, anything they wanted all day long and I'll still cooperating if they want to do any more testing when we get back. Have at it."

Takter said another issue is Jug security was inadequate.

"The security is a joke," he said. "I see people going in and out there, no one is checking. I swear, if I wanted to give the horse something, I could have done it hundreds of times. These people should be checked every time they are coming in and out. The grooms shouldn't be allowed to leave... They should be searched."

Alagna said, "We spent a lot of money to come here this week and we just want a fair shake. We're in detention and we expect to be in detention and want everyone to act like they are in detention. Regardless if it happened or not, there was intent to do something and we just want answers."

Where the phone in question is now, is unclear. Coleman said she asked the judges to return the phone but judges only received photos of the messages visible on the lock screen.

The Delaware County Fair issued a statement regarding the trainers' protest: "The horsemen expressed their concerns to the Ohio State Racing Commission (OSRC). Little Brown Jug officials worked with the OSRC and the horsemen and we are pleased that the horsemen participated in our event. At this point it is an OSRC decision."

Standing up for harness racing

by Dean Towers

Back in 2003, Lance Armstrong was in the middle of his long win streak at the Tour De France. He was pretty much King of the bike racing world, and sponsorship money was flying into the sport, helping just about everyone.

Most in the sport knew about the way Armstrong's team (and others) played the game and they towed the line, but one French cyclist was having none of it. He told everyone who would listen what (he thought) was happening with Armstrong, by way of performance enhancing drugs. In the comprehensive book about the cycling culture – The Secret Race – the author shared a story about how this rider was an immediate persona non grata. At one point – the author contends – Armstrong and his cohorts were cycling surrounding the French rider on practice runs, intimidating him.

'Keep quiet and stop killing our golden goose,' was the gist of it.

Fast forwarding six or seven years, the house of cards that was some of cycling – and Armstrong – began to crumble. No longer was there one solitary French rider willing to shun these teams, there were dozens of them. Riders who were playing the game and were caught, were singing like a bird. The culture was changed.

When I read that book I thought a lot about harness racing. Most in this sport are that French rider – people who are honest, know something is wrong in some barns, and are not happy about it. But, in my view, the prevalent thought in harness racing has always been about keeping quiet; that saying anything gives ammunition to those who think "we're all crooks," or that their words might end up on an industry website. There are some in the sport – even in positions of power – who don't even want fines and suspensions printed in a program because someone might read them. If we don't talk about fight club, there's no fight club.

This week that seemed to change.

I got an email on Wednesday telling me about a scuttlebutt regarding some who were talking to owners who use suspect trainers, and sharing their displeasure. Then, a few minutes later, another text came across about a brouhaha in the detention barn. My friend on the ground noted that Lou Pena was apparently in the barn with I Said Diamonds – a planned Jugette starter – and "some trainers are calling on the judges to do something." I did what I usually do with such information, nothing. I simply expected nothing to happen.

But it did. I Said Diamonds was scratched. And there was a name behind the complaint, willingly placed right into the harness trade press.

"It was not a secret that he (Pena) was here Monday morning, sweeping up, taking care of her. It bothered me when I got here and saw Pena in the detention barn. I didn't want to put a cloud over the race, but when someone is in the stall, you can't ignore it." Nancy Johansson said she was relieved I Said Diamonds was scratched.

Backing up Nancy, was the veteran trainer of the eventual Jugette winner, Bob McIntosh. Again, via Harnessracing.com:

"Yes, I was prepared to scratch," McIntosh said. "This was Jeez, why doesn't this ever happen in T-bred racing?

Trainers unite to protest alleged suspicious behavior around Jug horse, refuse to take part in post parade for 1st heat. More to come...

just so blatant. I was glad it got resolved before I got here. The rules are posted in the barn," he added. "In my mind, the only way to be effective is to make the owners accountable, and suspend the horse. I had heard the first of the year that Pena was training 100 horses under various different trainers, so I guess it might be true," he said.

Those were two people standing up for their sport. And they were willing to put their names behind it, where everyone can see them.

That wasn't all of course. Something else happened on Jug day itself. Trainer Tony Alagna put his name to the complaint regarding the Betting Line situation, reported here and elsewhere.

"We know that's not a lot, but we called it into question and we thought it was time for us in the industry to take a little bit of a stand," he told Dave Briggs of Harness Racing Update.

While Tony stood up, others followed. Trainers such as Jimmy Takter and Ron Burke stood right along with him, protesting by not coming out for the post parade for the first heat. They were letting everyone know how they felt about the situation.

While that was going on, a funny thing happened. On social media, on my email, on my phone, there was cheering.

"Good for them."

"It needed to happen. I'm proud of this sport today."

Thoroughbred people, some of whom share rather suspect opinions about harness racing (you've heard them), were singing a slightly different tune.

No, it wasn't the usual "harness racing is crooked", it was 'we've all got some issues that need to be addressed, and it's nice to see harness racing trainers doing something about it.'

Trust me, from someone with dozens of thoroughbred friends who hears this stuff a half dozen times a week, it was refreshing.

Whatever the motivation; whatever the backstories; whatever the reason this week was different from this sport's recent past.

I applaud those who stood up to be counted. It showed passion. It showed that there's still some fire in the belly for the sport of harness racing.

I don't think that's ever a bad thing.

The People's Horse in the People's Place

After logging nearly 14,000 miles this year traveling to eight states or provinces over seven months and 21 starts, Wiggle It Jiggleit returned to Delaware, Ohio to meet his fans – and he wasn't even racing.

by Dave Briggs

The crowd was building around Wiggle It Jiggleit's stall in the Jug Barn Thursday morning and trainer Clyde Francis was quietly standing back and taking in the scene. As fan after fan stepped into the stall to pose for a photo with the superstar pacer, a hint of a satisfied smile formed beneath the trainer's moustache.

Dave Landry

Trainer Clyde Francis said he still watches replays of Wiggle It Jiggleit winning the 2015 Little Brown Jug.

Dave Landry

Trainer Clyde Francis said he still watches replays of Wiggle It Jiggleit winning the 2015 Little Brown Jug.

The People's Horse was in the people's place a year after his most stirring victory.

Truth is, Wiggle It Jiggleit's toe-to-toe slugfest with Lost For Words in the deciding heat of the 2015 Jug may be the most stirring victory in the history of the game.

For Francis, it's not debatable.

"How can you top it? I still watch it. I could be lying in bed and I'll pull my phone up and watch the race," he said, that hint of a smile morphing into a sweet grin.

A black and red harness bag with the Clyde Francis Stable stitched into it hung beside the stall. The symbolism was not lost on the soft-spoken 59-year-old horseman who has long worked as an assistant trainer to George Teague, Jr., who owns Wiggle It Jiggleit with the Teague Racing Partnership LLC. Last year, as part of his desire to down-size a stable that once numbered 120 horses – "Back then we went dark to dark, started in the dark and finished in the dark," Francis said – Teague turned the stable over to Francis.

"It means a lot. I don't think you'll find anyone else who would do something like that, put you down to train all the horses. That's bold as hell," Francis said, the appreciation clear in his eyes. The move was even more impressive considering Teague knew full-well what he was sitting on with the son of Mr Wiggles out of Mozzie Hanover.

"Even before (Wiggle It Jiggleit) started racing, George said, 'You'll be known as the trainer of one of the best horses ever,'" Francis said.

Francis has worked for it. Just this year alone, he and Wiggle It Jiggleit's caretaker Big Mike Taylor have logged nearly 14,000 miles, traveling from their base at Harrington Raceway in Delaware to eight states or provinces over seven months and 21 starts. Big track, small track and everything in between, Wiggle It Jiggleit will take on all comers, which is particularly impressive considering he's a four-year-old taking on older horses.

"Horses don't usually hold up like that these days. He's week in and week out. We started him last year in January and everybody was saying then, 'He won't be around in the summer.' But we managed him well. We raced early and then gave him time off to freshen him back up and when the big races started he was ready to go," Francis said of the $3.6 million-winning gelding voted 2015 Horse of the Year.

"When you've got a horse like this, it gives you the energy

Dave Landry

to keep going,” Francis said.

Francis said all those miles seem like a breeze compared to all the years he, “shipped all over the place and never had anything that ever compared to (Wiggle It Jiggleit).”

Even better, the Wiggle It Jiggleit crew has taken the people along for the ride, literally. The connections donated a ride behind him to lead this year’s Jug post parade that attracted a winning bid from Breana Carsey of MJB Got Faith fame (HRU story Aug. 26, 2016) in support of New Vocations Racehorse Adoption Program.

“He’s been a lot of fun. I’ve been there with George (Teague) back to Rainbow Blue. I remember when she came along. Most people would say you get a horse like Blue or Total Truth or Western Ace, that’s the horse of a lifetime and then his guy comes along,” Francis said. “You would’ve thought with some of the other ones that that would have been ‘it’, but this dude comes along and I’ve never seen a horse like it.”

Judging from the lineup waiting to see Wiggle It Jiggleit, neither have his people.

UPDATE

Pro NJ casino campaign suspended

Paul Fireman and Jeff Gural reluctantly announced Thursday the suspension of the paid media component of the statewide OUR Turn NJ campaign. In doing so, they issued the following joint statement:

“We believe deeply that gaming expansion to Northern New Jersey is a remarkable opportunity that should not be squandered. We have committed $4 billion in private investment to this state to create world class resort destinations with gaming. The benefits include 43,000 new jobs and hundreds of millions of dollars in recaptured revenue – a rare opportunity for New Jersey. In addition, as New York debates allowing gaming in New York City, it is critical that we beat them to market or risk losing this opportunity permanently.

“The data, however, speaks for itself. The current political climate in New Jersey and voters’ concerns about the lack of details relating to the effort have proved overwhelming. Even knowing that an out-of-country gaming company that sends New Jerseyans’ gaming dollars to Malaysia is funding opposition ads does not have an impact. As such, with great reluctance we have decided to suspend the paid media component of the statewide campaign.”

Recent internal and third-party polling data have noted how difficult the current climate is. As noted in the internal polling summary, “Voters have a very negative outlook on the direction of the state and have extremely low confidence that the revenue promised in the Casino Expansion Amendment will be delivered as it is promised. Just 19 per cent of New Jersey voters believe that the state is headed in the right direction. And an even lower proportion (10 per cent) have a high level of confidence that the state will deliver upon the promised revenue as stated in the ballot measure.”

The summary also notes that when asked to explain why they have low or no confidence in the revenue being delivered as promised in the amendment, 50 per cent of respondents say it is because politicians will use the funds for their own priorities, while another 30 per cent volunteer that it is a concern for them.

The polling shows that, while there are strong arguments to be made for the benefits of gaming expansion, “Respondents react very strongly to reasons to oppose the Amendment, which play to the lack of specifics and distrust directed at state government in Trenton. For comparison, the highest testing positive message is viewed as a very strong reason to support the measure by 48 per cent of voters. The four negative messages tested in the survey all receive anywhere between 56 per cent to 60 per cent of voters who say that each one is a very strong reason to oppose the measure.”

Polling released earlier this week by Rutgers-Eagleton reinforces this voter dissatisfaction. In that poll, only 25 per cent of those surveyed believe New Jersey is headed in the right direction, while 68 per cent say the state has gone off on the wrong track.

The poll is available here.

The current campaign to expand gaming is mirroring New Jersey’s first efforts to legalize casino gaming in 1974. In that year, the New Jersey voters rejected a ballot initiative to legalize gaming due to a lack of specifics in the ballot question about where casinos would be located. Two years later, a revised ballot question passed. One of the main reasons the 1976 question passed, unlike the 1974 one, was that it was more specific in nature. The 1974 campaign indicated that casinos would most likely be in Atlantic City, but the resolution itself did not indicate a specific location. Thus, proponents of the 1974 resolution “later admitted that a large number of voters apparently rejected the proposal simply because they did not want to see casinos in their own community.” In 1976, the resolution clearly stated that casinos would only be legal in Atlantic City, making voters far more comfortable with the idea.
